Cons., 5th Sep., No. 3, p. 2419

Government observe that as section IV, Regulation II of 1812, has always been construed as authorizing a general export duty of 3 per cent on grain conveyed by sea from the subordinate ports without reference to its destination and that in the principle explained in section XX, Regulation I of 1802, the exemption declared in section XXIII, Regulation XI of 1803, is virtually repealed by that provision, it is unnecessary to pass a declaratory Regulation as recommended by the Board of Revenue. Government further observe that the specific duty of 3 per cent is the duty to be levied generally on grain exported from the subordinate ports without any distinction between foreign and British vessels and that an import duty is not leviable under any circumstances.
